CREDITORS WANT IN ON THOMPSON PROFIT

Tentative Plan Looking to That Has Been Agreed Upon.

UNIONTOWN, July 12.—Interested parties here are discussing a plan whereby unsecured creditors of J. V. Thompson would participate in the profits of the National City Company, underwriting syndicate for the so-called Hill deal, which has been presented to the National City Company by the J. V. Thompson Creditors' committee. The profit-sharing on the part of the unsecured creditors would be in addition to the 40 cents on the dollar they are to receive in cash for their claims against Mr. Thompson. The so-called Hill deal is merged into what will be known as The National City Company, a group of eastern capitalists identified with the National City Bank interests, the new concern being the underwriters of the J. V. Thompson estate.

This proposition was given detailed consideration at a meeting of the J. V. Thompson Creditors' Committee in New York on Tuesday. The tentative plan was presented to the committee by Samuel Undermyer, their attorney, and some features not entirely satisfactory to the creditors' committee were referred back to Mr. Undermyer for consultation with the representatives of The National City Company. The consideration is to be held as soon as possible and Mr. Undermyer will report back to the committee at a date to be named. A statement issued in New York by the committee following the meeting is that it is not yet decided whether the plan will be adopted or not.

CHAMP OF CHAMPS MAY QUIT BILLIARDS TO JOIN NAVY

By PAUL PURMAN.

The billiard world may soon be looking for a new champion.

Willie Hoppe, champion of champions, greatest of all billiardists, past or present, is seriously considering entering the navy.

Under the Crowder "work or fight" order Willie, as champion knight of the green cloth, is not engaged in an useful occupation. Hoppe is just inside the draft age.

So Hoppe believes the navy is the place for him to land.

Hoppe is too much of an American to seek a subterfuge in some occupation which would permit him some time to practice billiards. He is too much of an American to complain against the Crowder edict, but he declares that it will end his career as a champion competitive billiardist.

"Three months of military service would be enough to shatter championship billiard form beyond all hope," Hoppe said recently in New York. "By entering the navy I will be automatically announcing my retirement from the game."

"Billiards is a game of exact science, that demands delicate hand-spring tension and absolute accuracy. This can only be maintained by constant practice and freedom from counter action. Any other employment would destroy the efficiency a champion must have."

Hoppe believes other athletes will be similarly affected, although perhaps in less degree. Baseball players, boxers, athletes of all sorts with their nervous systems impaired by long months in the trenches and the rigors of battle will find they have lost their cunning.

Hoppe is the greatest of all billiardists. He has never been defeated in his particular line, half line billiards. His records are comprehensive. Every now and then new styles of the game have been invented for him and he has always showed his superior meeting. It can turn the stream of hero and heroine. No other place can we watch it; and so clever have our screen artists become that we imagine we are doing so. Life when we do it is no wonder up like a child's dream, and wherefore of depicting what we see before our eyes.

Last night a woman in the city left a new magazine on one of the tables in a local drug store. When she went back after it, she found an elderly couple much interested in it. They sat close together bending over the pictured story of life at one of our camps. Not liking to take the magazine directly from their hands, the owner stood waiting for a moment near the door. She heard quite distinctly the words: "John, do you suppose it's really like that?" "Sure, mother," said the husband and father. "Well, all I can say is it's wonderful. No wonder he don't want to come home. But oh, John, suppose he has to go across on one of those boats!" "If he has to, he'll go," replied John with a careless shrug. It was as plain as the nose on your face that John's chief business in life was to make his wife believe he viewed all such matters as insignificant details. But I saw a set look in his face which all fathers wear. I saw a sternness which no doubt the boy himself had misunderstood when at home; but I have seen that kind of sternness too often; that rigid line about the mouth, those straight seeing steady eyes, that square shoulder and broad chin. It may make for a bit of sternness about the house occasionally, but it spells gentleness with a capital G and includes many comforting qualities in life.

Speaking of comforting qualities, I know a man who comes into his home like a load of bricks was being thrown into the street, or the coal was being put into the cellar. He has every member of his family running in every direction to wait on him. He doesn't ask it. In fact he doesn't like it. But they do it just the same. But what a pleasure it is to sit down to the table with him. Instead of starting in on whatever comes handiest, he looks about to see that his family are all there. Next he waits on them, seeing that everything is passed before he as much as helps himself. Perhaps you say this is no out-of-the-ordinary thing—that every man does it. Then you are mistaken. There are families who sit down to the table, every fellow to himself. They are as far from each other as though they had met for the first time. There is no passing unless strictly ordered. Everybody eats when he touches the chair. Nobody waits for anybody else. And when each member of the family has finished his meal, he arises with the utmost unconcern and goes about his business. All of which goes to prove that we are many and different in this life.

What did you say to yourself when you got out of bed this morning? Did you get back in again with the remark, "Well, I don't see much encouragement in this sort of thing!" I don't blame you, though after all there is something in a gray landscape which demands appreciation. The sky was merely a moving picture screen before time to open. And a much more attractive one because relieved on all sides by trees, roofs of different colors, hills and corn fields. Did you notice the pale yellow apples hung here and there like Christmas tree ornaments? And how fine that rain was—

Nearly 15,000 British seamen have been murdered by German pirates since August, 1914.

The Best Ounce of Preventative for a Man is a Light Weight Suit

When Old Sol starts to work in real earnest, then a man wants to jump into a lightweight suit as fast as he can before his blood gets heated up.

You know an ounce of preventative well, these Air-O-Weave Suits don't weigh more than an ounce or so when they're on you and they do keep off a pound of heat. The suits are all new and they include Palm Beach, Kool Kloth, Mohair, Silk and Tropical worsteds at $10.00 to $30.00.
